

Introduction
 The purpose of this study is to investigate the effects of a new educational program on student performance. The program is designed to improve critical thinking and problem-solving skills through a series of interactive modules. The study will involve a group of students who will participate in the program and a control group that will not. Data will be collected at the beginning and end of the program to measure changes in performance. The results of the study will be used to inform future educational practices and to determine the effectiveness of the program.

Methodology
 The study will use a quasi-experimental design. The participants will be divided into two groups: the experimental group, which will receive the new educational program, and the control group, which will receive the standard curriculum. The program consists of several modules that focus on critical thinking and problem-solving. The modules are designed to be interactive and engaging, with a variety of activities and exercises. The data will be collected using a standardized test that measures critical thinking and problem-solving skills. The test will be administered at the beginning and end of the program to measure the impact of the program on student performance.

Results and Discussion
 The results of the study show that the experimental group performed significantly better than the control group on the standardized test. This suggests that the new educational program is effective in improving critical thinking and problem-solving skills. The discussion of the results will explore the reasons for the improvement and the implications for future educational practices. The study also identifies some limitations and areas for further research.

Conclusion
 The study concludes that the new educational program is effective in improving critical thinking and problem-solving skills. The results of the study suggest that the program should be implemented in other schools and districts to improve student performance. The study also identifies some limitations and areas for further research.
