Supply Chain Network Economics Anna Nagurney,2006-01-01 This book is the first to bring an economics perspective in a rigorous manner to complex decision making in the management of supply chains It provides the foundations for the modeling of the interrelationships among decision makers in supply chains ranging from manufacturers distributors and retailers to the consumers assuming individualized behavior The models handle both competition and cooperation and provide the resulting product flows and prices in the chains A unique network economics perspective is brought to the issue setting the book apart from the numerous management and operations research volumes available After an introduction of the theoretical foundations the book then extends and applies the theory to energy supply chains in the form of electric power generation and distribution networks The relationships between electric power supply chains and transportation networks are vividly captured through theoretical results and the solution of practical examples The book then explores environmental supply chain and financial networks with intermediation which are interpreted as supply chains and also solved as such Throughout the underlying theme is that of transportation networks and how the relationships between supply chain networks and the more established theory of transportation network equilibria can be applied and exploited for logistic type applications Economists and transportation researchers will find the book s theory and applications of great interest

Operations researchers and management scientists as well as practitioners in business logistics will be interested in the book s methodological and practical tools

However because of recent social scandals within the supply chain operations of Multinationals an investigation targeting social sustainability and its effective implementation within the supply chain would provide important insights into such yet neglected field of research This thesis tries to tackle this issue and analyses whether MNCs extent their SSS practices to suppliers in regulatory distant countries the same way as they do within countries close to their home market The thesis intends to fill the research gap which exists around SSS and provides valuable insides into how consistent MNCs are in extending SSS practices among their supplier network On the basis of telephone interviews and company data the thesis analyses the social sustainability efforts of The Otto Group the second largest online retailer in the world The two methods to monitor suppliers compliance that are examined in this thesis are assessment and collaboration Results show that Multinationals should not rely on either one of these two monitoring methods but should combine them using Assessment only as first step and Collaboration as second Since assessment usually provides the buyer solely with a snapshot of the current situation at suppliers site collaboration as second step provides the relationship with a more mutual character Frequent non compliance of parties the buyer and the supplier emphasise that collaboration and therefore mutual controlling processes are necessary In case the business relationship between buyer and supplier does involve operations in risky low regulated countries these findings are even more highlighted Studies in the Packing Industry: The management of chain meat markets, by E.
