Sustainable by Design J. C. Wandemberg, 2018-02-10 This research is focused on the identification and enhanced understanding of systemic issues in general e.g economic organizational environmental and human behavior in particular e.g participation commitment responsibility leading to resource misallocation over exploitation and unsustainable project outcomes The approach used transcends conventional neoclassical welfare economics Human behaviors such as participation and commitment and factors that influence and motivate those behaviors e.g economic organizational environmental are central to any understanding of how to design for sustainable outcomes and for the mitigation elimination of negative externalities Research has shown that all organizations formal or informal make a conscious or unconscious choice between the only two possible genotypic organizational structures 1 bureaucratic and 2 participative democratic The effects of this choice on individual and collective behaviors i.e goal seeking vs ideal seeking and the management implications thereof are profoundly different A review of literature on projects conducted throughout the world correlates project effectiveness i.e success in meeting project objectives and maintaining the desired outcomes and negative outcomes i.e failure to meet project objectives and maintaining the desired outcomes misallocation of resources and negative externalities with specific types of project organizational structures

Conservation Project Design ,1989      The Design of a Luxury Car Center in Bangkok Amir Kamyabi,2020-12-14 Bachelor Thesis from the year 2019 in the subject Art Architecture History of Construction course Interior Architecture language English abstract This thesis proposes a design that explores the value of experience and entertainment during servicing in order to create a more user friendly experience and satisfaction for the costumer Through exhibitions we will be able to showcase luxury car brands And the use of a gathering space and a co working and conventional space would be the base for interactions between users The car service center would be a mixed use service The thesis will utilize architectural and design techniques for more interactive spaces so that users become more familiar with the history of luxury car brands and the direction different brands are headed towards It will serve as a place of exhibition sales and services as well holding conferences to utilize the building and the hotels connected This building will act as a land mark that attract luxury users Thonburi District The Luxury Car Center will be located near the intersection of Charoen Nakhon and Rama III in order to both benefit from such a mixture of a service community and center so that other car service costumers in the area also could utilize this active space This center will act as a mixture of the past present and future A center that drives on fulfilling the needs of customers      The Engineering Institution of Zambia 2007 Symposium Proceedings Engineering Institution of

Family Resources and Their Impact on Living Standard and Food Security of Farmers in the Mountainous Farming Systems in Northwest Vietnam Anh Tai Do,2004 About the book Socio economic development in the rural mountainous area of Northern Vietnam depends to a high degree on the use and Exploitation of the natural resources However the population pressure is leading to an increasing demand on these resources and this in turn shows some kind of overuse and misuse of the natural resources This again has a strong impact on the living standard and food security of the farmers in the region as well as has an implication on the sustainable development of the economy of the region and country This book attempts to assess the socio economic situation of families in the relevant to family resources especially natural resources and the living standard and food security of different settlement in three different altitude locations These locations coincide with different ethnic groups and different level of remoteness from urban centers The study assessed the impact of future strategies concerning resources availability use and management on the living standard and food security of farming families in the mountainous areas The economic development trends in the mountainous areas show a link to the altitudinal ethnical and commercial gradient and the availability of the production resources especially natural resources The impact analysis of potential future strategies were simulated in multi periodical dynamic linear programming models at family level The results indicate that in order to improve farm and family incomes as well as living standards of the people in the area sustainable use of natural resources through effective soils and forests protection managed by the families themselves will require greater emphasis since small changes in these resources in the current stage of development will have much greater impact on the living standard of the families than man made resources such as capital

Nontimber Forest Products in the United States Eric T. Jones,Rebecca Jean McLain,James F. Weigand,2002 A quiet revolution is taking place in America's forests. Once seen primarily as stands of timber, our woodlands are now prized as a rich source of a wide range of commodities from wild mushrooms and maple sugar to hundreds of medicinal plants whose uses have only begun to be fully realized. Now as timber harvesting becomes more mechanized and requires less labor, the image of the lumberjack is being replaced by that of the forager. This book provides the first comprehensive examination of nontimber forest products (NTFPs) in the United States, illustrating their diverse importance, describing the people who harvest them, and outlining the steps that are being taken to ensure access to them. As the first extensive national overview of NTFP policy and management specific to the United States, it brings together research from numerous disciplines and analytical perspectives such as economics, mycology, history, ecology, law, entomology, forestry, geography, and anthropology in order to provide a cohesive picture of the current and potential role of NTFPs. The contributors review the state of scientific knowledge of NTFPs by offering a survey of commercial and noncommercial products, an overview of uses and users, and discussions of sustainable management issues associated with ecology, cultural traditions, forest policy, and commerce. They examine some of the major social, economic, and biological benefits of NTFPs while also addressing the potential negative consequences of NTFP harvesting on forest ecosystems and on NTFP species populations. Within this wealth of information are rich accounts of NTFP use drawn from all parts of the American landscape, from the Pacific Northwest to the Caribbean. From honey production to a review of nontimber forest economies still active in the United States, such as the Ojibway harvest of plants, recounted here, the book takes in the whole breadth of recent NTFP issues, including ecological concerns associated with the expansion of NTFP markets and NTFP tenure issues on federally managed lands. No other volume offers such a comprehensive overview of NTFPs in North America. By examining all aspects of these products, it contributes to the development of more sophisticated policy and management frameworks for not only ensuring their ongoing use but also protecting the future of our forests.
