Impact of Processing on Food Safety Lauren S. Jackson, Mark G. Knize, Jeffrey N. Morgan, 2012-12-06 The contents of this book are the proceedings of the ACS symposium Impact of Processing on Food Safety which was held April 16 17 1997 at the American Chemical Society National Meeting in San Francisco CA This symposium brought together researchers from diverse backgrounds in academia government and industry Twenty speakers discussed topics ranging from the regulatory aspects of food processing to the microbiological and chemical changes in food during processing The main goal of food processing is to improve the microbial safety of food by destroying pathogenic and spoilage organisms Food processing can also improve food safety by destroying or eliminating naturally occurring toxins chemical contaminants and antinutritive factors Unfortunately processing can also cause chemical changes that result in the formation of toxic or antinutritive factors The purpose of this book is to summarize our knowledge of both the beneficial and deleterious effects of processing Chapter 1 considers the consumer's perceptions about food contaminants and food processing Chapter 2 summarizes the effects of traditional and nontraditional processing methods on microorganisms in food Chapters 3 6 review the effects of processing on lipids fatty acids and cholesterol in food Changes in the nutritive value of vitamins and minerals as a result of processing are discussed in chapter 7 Chapter 8 concentrates on how processing reduces the allergenicity of some foods

Molecular Characterization of Composite Interfaces Hatsuo Ishida, Ganesh Kumar, 2013-11-11 This book is an extended version of the proceedings of the Symposium on Polymer Composites Interfaces which was held under the auspices of the Division of Polymer Chemistry American Chemical Society ACS during the annual ACS meeting in Seattle March 1983 The importance of the interface in composite materials has been recognized since the inception of modern composite technology Specifically silane coupling agents were developed for glass fiber reinforced composites at a very early date Ever since then the diversity of composite materials and the development of various surface treatment methods have led to the establishment of an interface art A trial and error approach has dominated the interfacial aspects of composite technology until very recently With the advent of modern analytical techniques for surface characterization it became possible to study detailed surface and interface structures It was hoped that this symposium would catalyze such a fundamental and scientific approach in composite studies For this reason the symposium was structured to verify the influence of interfacial structures on the mechanical and physical performance of composites and to improve our knowledge of the microstructure of composite interfaces As the word composite indicates interdisciplinary interaction is indispensable for proper understanding of multiphase systems
