

PREPARATION

Before venturing out into the wilderness, even the most skilled among us should take some basic safety precautions. And while you may be able to spend the rest of your days living comfortably in the wild with just this book and your trusty knife, don't skip these initial pages. They'll increase your chances of survival. It's been said that fortune favors the bold, but I say that fortune favors the prepared.

001 BEGIN WITH THE BASICS

Any and every excursion into the wild should begin with these steps, at the very least. Your life may very literally depend on it.

HAVE A PLAN Don't just head off blindly into the wilderness. Plan your destination, route, proposed parking area, vehicle-of-choice, companions (if any), and most importantly your return date and time.

SHARE YOUR PLAN Make sure that someone knows all of the details of your plan. This way, if you don't contact them by the appointed time they'll know that you're in trouble and will have the information they need to help.

GET ORIENTED Study a map of the location you will be exploring, and bring the map and compass with you. Learning the terrain and its features ahead of time makes navigation somewhat (and we're less likely to get lost).

DRESS THE PART Wear appropriate clothing and underwear—layers, wool, and synthetics are ideal. Adaptation is most conditions.

TAKE YOUR PHONE A charged mobile phone should always be part of your outdoor gear. You'll call for help (in turn, a potential disaster into a three-hour inconvenience). And if the signal is weak, try a text message. Text often works in spots where phone calls can't connect.

CARRY A KIT Bring a survival kit on every outing. It should include items for shelter, signaling, fire making, water procurement, first aid, navigation, spare underwear, and food.

BRING A FRIEND It's more fun to have adventures with a friend, and with even one companion, you have someone to watch your back, render first aid, or go for help.

WATCH THE WEATHER Get the most accurate weather forecast before you head out, and stay vigilant. An unexpected change in the weather can turn a pleasant campsite into a dangerous situation.

LEARN FIRST AID With even a little first-aid training you can respond to many minor and even major incidents—even if you don't have many supplies to work with.

PRACTICE, PRACTICE, PRACTICE You can learn a lot from watching survival videos and reading books like this one, but there's a big difference between spectator and participant. Gain your own personal experience, and you'll be able to carry it for the rest of your days.
