

The life cycle of a beaver

Beaver embryos, or developing babies, grow inside their mother's body until they are ready to be born. In spring, kits, or baby beavers, are born in a group called a litter. There are usually four kits in a litter. The kits live in the lodge with both of their parents. The next spring, the young beavers are yearlings, or one-year-old beavers. At this time, the mother beaver has another litter. The lodge now contains about ten beavers—the mother, the father, four yearlings, and four kits. This family group is called a colony. The yearlings live in the lodge until the following spring, when they are two. Two-year-old beavers are called juveniles. Each juvenile leaves the lodge to find a partner. By winter, the juveniles are adults. Each pair of adults creates its own colony by mating and having kits. The beaver partners will stay together for the rest of their lives.
