In ancient times people had the belief that for a person to be in harmony with his/her environment then he/she has to integrate the body, the mind and the spirit. For the integration of these three, the emotions, actions and intelligence must be balanced. Due to this, people formulated a special way to achieve and maintain this balance, which is done through exercises, breathing and meditation. These are called the three main yoga structures. As a beginner, you have to be abreast with these principles for effective participation of the activity.

1. Proper relaxation: Through the process of releasing tension in the muscles and putting the whole body at rest, the nervous system is revitalized and able to achieve inner peace. This makes you feel very much relaxed and refreshed, which helps to conserve the body's energy and let go of all things troubling the mind.
2. Proper exercise: The principle of proper exercise in Yoga is basically the idea of the physical body to move and exercise. When the body is exercised properly, the muscles and ligaments stretch and tone, which enhances flexibility of the spine and the joints, which eventually improves the circulation of blood. The various Yoga postures are specifically designed to regulate the physical and physiological functions of the body. Take note that the execution of the various Yoga postures is beneficial to the body and also contributes to the spiritual and mental growth.
