Time To Care Personal Medicine In The Age Of Technology:

Time to Care Norman Makous, 2009-12 Frequently today patients are subjected to the wrong tests and treatments by specialists The personal relationship between patient and doctor that was central in traditional medicine can help prevent these problems This unique observation by Dr Norman Makous a personal care cardiologist is based on sixty years of medical practice from the late 1940s into the early 21st Century Time to Care Personal Medicine in the Age of Technology proves that people want and need a doctor they can trust Filled with dozens of case anecdotes that illustrate the crucial role of the patient doctor relationship Time to Care shows how medical practice has changed dramatically in recent decades Today the personal relationship between the patient and doctor has been displaced by technology Millions of dollars are spent on unnecessary tests and incorrect treatments The high cost of technology based care has caused an economic squeeze in healthcare that has already led to covert rationing of medical services The US healthcare system can little afford to continue its wasteful and ineffective practices Time to Care proposes that the patient doctor relationship be brought back to the center of the healthcare system This will humanize treatment and help to reduce unnecessary spending leading to a happier and healthier society Publisher s description
