Social Thought & Research ,1997 African American Clinical Psychologists' Q-sort Conceptualizations of Optimal Mental Health Antoinette Elizabeth Kavanaugh,1997 The present study used the California Q set CQ set and Q sort methodology Block 1961 to study how African American clinical psychologists conceptualize optimal mental health Specifically the study examined how their Q sort descriptions vary as a function of the race of the target and the Afrocentricity of the judges Template Q sorts were developed to represent the collective judgment of a group of individual judges Q sorts When the conventional Q sort template matching method was used to analyze the data the template Q sorts of optimal mental health were virtually the same regardless of the target of the sort European American or African American or the psychologists level of Afrocentricity high or low Furthermore African American psychologists conceptualizations of optimal mental health were also essentially the same as European American clinical psychologists Block 1961 description of optimal mental health A unique aspect of this study is that the data were also analyzed using an ANOVA model By assessing the levels of variance within various groups of individual Q sorts and the variance between groups it was determined that it is possible for templates to be highly correlated and significantly different Finally although the templates were highly similar participants reported that they believed optimal mental health was different for an African American and a European American Thus the appropriateness of using the CQ set to conceptualize optimal mental health from a non Eurocentric perspective is explored Continuity and Change in Heterosexual Relations from Middle Childhood to Adolescence David Taylor Schmit,1995 Resilient Identities William B.
