Study Guide for Exam 1

Developmental Psychology: the discipline that studies the physical, cognitive, social, and emotional development of humans.

Developmental stages:

1. Developmental periods: broadest of life course, identifying major physical and psychological systems and structures that develop over time. Includes biological, behavioral, and cognitive development during infancy, childhood, adolescence, and adulthood.
2. Child Development: the period of growth and development from birth to adolescence, including physical, cognitive, and emotional development. It is characterized by rapid growth and development, especially in the first few years of life.
3. Adolescence: the period of life between childhood and adulthood, characterized by physical, cognitive, and emotional development. It is characterized by rapid growth and development, especially in the first few years of life.
4. Adulthood: the period of life after adolescence, characterized by physical, cognitive, and emotional development. It is characterized by slower growth and development, especially in the first few years of life.
5. Older Adulthood: the period of life after middle age, characterized by physical, cognitive, and emotional development. It is characterized by slower growth and development, especially in the first few years of life.

Developmental research:

1. Longitudinal research: studies that follow the same group of people over time, allowing researchers to track changes in behavior, cognition, and emotion over time. This method is useful for studying developmental changes that occur over a long period of time.
2. Experimental research: studies that manipulate one or more variables to see if they cause changes in behavior, cognition, and emotion. This method is useful for studying causal relationships between variables.
3. Correlational research: studies that look for relationships between variables without manipulating them. This method is useful for identifying associations between variables.
4. Qualitative research: studies that use non-numerical data to understand human behavior, cognition, and emotion. This method is useful for understanding the meaning and context of human experiences.
