Providence, Rhode Island, with approximately 100,000 people, is the fourth largest city in the nation. It is the seat of the state government and is known for its historic architecture and its proximity to the ocean. The city is also home to the Rhode Island School of Design and the University of Rhode Island.

One of the primary objectives of the National Weather Service is to provide accurate and timely weather forecasts to the public. This is achieved through a combination of advanced technology and skilled personnel. The service uses a variety of instruments and techniques to collect data on atmospheric conditions, which is then analyzed to produce forecasts. These forecasts are disseminated to the public through various media, including television, radio, and the internet. The National Weather Service also provides specialized services to government agencies and the private sector, such as aviation weather and marine forecasts. Overall, the service plays a crucial role in helping people prepare for and respond to weather-related events.
