Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a 12-week walking program, while the control group (n = 20) remained sedentary. The walking program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The program was supervised by a physical therapist. The control group was instructed to remain sedentary. The primary outcome measure was the change in the 6-minute walk test (6MWT) score. Secondary outcome measures included changes in heart rate, blood pressure, and self-reported physical and psychological health. The 6MWT score increased significantly in the walking group compared to the control group. There were no significant changes in heart rate, blood pressure, or self-reported physical and psychological health. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

1. Introduction

This manual provides important information about the three-phase and single-phase brake motors that must be followed during the installation, operation and maintenance. Thus, we recommend to read this manual carefully before performing any service on the motor. Responsibility with these instructions informed in this manual and others indicated on the various services, not with the product's warranty and any other service, operation, and maintenance instructions.

Blind rivets must be only installed in pieces compatible with their anchoring features and in applications and environments for which they are intended.
Blind rivets installed outdoors, or in the vertical position require the use of additional sheath to protect them from weather, for instance, use of a zinc coat.

2.1. Brake Coil Power Supply

This electromagnetic coil powered by direct current (DC), supported by a bridge rectifier consisting of silicon diodes and a transformer, which has undesirable voltage and creates a half-current modulation. The quarter-current power supply provides highest speed and reliable linear operation. The quarter-current (AC) power supply for the bridge rectifier can be obtained from an independent source, or from the motor terminals. This power supply can be 220/230/240 V, 50/60/50/60 Hz or 440/460/480 V supply for 60 Hz, according to the features of the bridge rectifier/coil assembly. The electromagnetic coil can be operated continuously within a 10% of its rated voltage.

 The cable entries used for power supply and control must be fitted with components (such as cable glands and conduits) that meet the applicable standards and regulations in each country and the degree of protection indicated on the motor nameplate.

Not-used cable inlet holes in the terminal box must be properly closed with plugs in order to assure the degree of protection indicated on the motor nameplate.

For flameproof motors with brakes, these components must be certified according to the type of protection and the flameproof Protection Level (EPL) indicated on the motor nameplate.

 The power supply from the bridge rectifier is required to release the brake, if the motor does not accelerate upon starting, turn it off and check the bridge rectifier connections. The brake coil may not be powered, if the motor still does not accelerate, contact the nearest WEISS Technik center.

3.2. Connection Diagram

The brake motor allows two different connections for Direct Current power supply providing either delayed or normal engagement. The connection diagrams below show the electrical connection when the bridge rectifier is supplied directly from the motor terminals:

A) Delayed engagement: The bridge rectifier of the input-output path has supported directly from the bridge terminals, without intermediate, as shown in Figure 1.

When the motor is disconnected from the power supply, the current flowing through the electromagnetic coil is interrupted and it stops operating. The pressure springs then push the armature towards the motor, compressing the rotor clamping disc between the two friction surfaces (armature plate and endshield), thus stopping the motor.

Upon a new startup, the system starts the motor and supplies the electromagnetic coil simultaneously. The armature plate is then attracted to the electromagnetic bar, overcoming the spring pressure and moving the brake disc, which disengages safely and moves away from the friction surfaces. The braking action stops, and allows the motor to turn freely.

4. Maximum Allowed Load Inertia

The maximum cold starts and the maximum cold torque indicated on table 1 must be considered for the operation of the engine at cold starts with breaks. For brake cooling to be applied in non-continuous areas or for cooling during different loads than those shown in table 1, contact WEG.
