Care in the Community ,2015

The Art of Personalising Psychosocial Interventions for People with Dementia

,2022 Psychosocial interventions are most effective when they fit the needs wishes and abilities of the person Also in the care for people with dementia person centred care is recommended worldwide However this is not yet daily practice also because of the lack of knowledge and tools about how to give shape to person centred care Therefore this dissertation focuses on the development evaluation and implementation of person centred psychosocial interventions in dementia care More specifically research was done into the development of person centred nature interventions into the evaluation and implementation of Unforgettable an art programme for people with dementia and their loved ones and into an instrument to measure quality of life in a person centred way The two interventions nature and art intervention are intended both for people with dementia living at home and people with dementia living in a long term care setting The interventions as well as the QOL instrument regard people with mild to moderate dementia

Rik Cheston is one of the pioneers of psychotherapy in dementia This book integrates his clinical expertise and research and is brought vividly to life by Rik s personal reflections and case examples drawn from his vast experience this book will be one that I keep coming back to and share Dr Emma Wolverson Clinical Psychologist Senior Lecturer in Ageing and Dementia Research Lead Dementia UK This is a thoughtful and at times provocative book providing knowledge and insights from theoretical and practical perspectives Cheston has set out to challenge you which he does extremely well Professor Ian Andrew James Innovations Team CNTW NHS Trust and honorary professor at the University of Bradford UK In this brilliant and timely book Richard Cheston draws upon over 30 years of insightful clinical practice to discuss not only psychotherapy but a whole lot more The book is lucidly written so can be valuable not only to specialists but to anyone whose work or personal life brings them into contact with dementia Actually that s most of us Tom Denning Professor of Dementia Research Mental Health whether this is delivered to individuals couples or groups Sets out a model of adjustment to dementia and outlines how talking about dementia needs to be tailored to the stage of change Explores how psychotherapy and counselling can be adapted to accommodate the client s cognitive changes and why we need to acknowledge that talking about dementia is not always possible or desirable Dementia and Psychotherapy Reconsidered is applicable not only to psychotherapists and counsellors but to clinicians and families who are supporting people living with dementia post diagnosis and want to find new ways of talking about their experiences The Reconsidering Dementia Series is an interdisciplinary series published by Open University Press that covers contemporary issues to challenge and engage readers in thinking deeply about the topic The dementia field has developed rapidly in its scope and practice over the past ten years and books in this series will unpack not only what this means for the student academic and practitioner but also for all those affected by dementia Series Editors Dr Keith Oliver and Professor Dawn Brooker MBE Richard Cheston worked as a Clinical Psychologist in the NHS before becoming Professor of Dementia Research at the University of the West of England UK in 2012

The Mindful Journey

Colleen O'Brien Davis, 2012 Over ten million people are forecasted to be living with Alzheimer's disease and related dementias by the year 2030 Pharmacological treatments to prevent or even slow the progression of disease have proved elusive Historically psychosocial interventions have focused on the caregiver because elders afflicted with dementia were considered to have lost self identity and the ability to learn benefit from socialization or make plans The results of the research indicate that the stigma which often accompanies old age and dementia can result in an elder accepting dementia as a master identity in which all the social milieu innocently position an elder in a particular way This identification with impairment in both the elder and the care partner can lead to disability that is beyond what could be expected from the level of existing pathology Emerging evidence suggest that psychosocial interventions that focus on the afflicted person and support self identity and ways of coping for example allow elders with dementia to lead more meaningful and fulfilling lives with a gentler and less distressful decline Making difficult decisions such as when to give up driving can be easier within a supportive social setting of peers This thesis examines several different styles of research and community based intervention groups and their subjective outcomes It also discusses the Alzheimer Caf concept which began in the Netherlands and is now spreading from England to the United States in limited numbers A proposal is presented for making psychosocial intervention common and easily accessed through several avenues that include improving physician knowledge of nuanced geriatric concerns providing community resources for physicians who have few treatment options and becoming a visible presence in natural communities of elders

Methods of Engagement of Dementia Care Users in Research and Practice Development W. George Kernohan, Suzanne Timmons, Anthea Innes, David Edvardsson, 2025-10-23 Dementia is a complex and chronic condition associated with significant physical cognitive and emotional challenges The burden of dementia weighs not only on people living with dementia but also on their families and caregivers The development of new effective and sustainable dementia care interventions therefore requires the active engagement of all service users in research studies and in the implementation of research findings in the dementia care practice while ensuring that interventions are tailored to meet individual needs and preferences However there remains a need to build innovative methods to engage service users in the development and evaluation of dementia care interventions The goal of this Research Topic is to explore and advance the use of innovative methods to engage dementia care users in research and practice development Specifically we aim to highlight best practices and approaches to involving people living with dementia and their families in the design implementation and evaluation of dementia care interventions with a focus on participatory co design and other collaborative approaches to research and practice development We welcome the submission of any type of manuscript supported by the journal including Original Research Review etc addressing a range of topics related to stakeholder engagement in the development and evaluation of dementia care interventions These topics may include but are not limited to the following The design and implementation of participatory co design or other collaborative approaches to research and practice development in dementia care including methods to identify and prioritize the needs and preferences of dementia care users and their families The role of patient and public involvement PPI in the development and evaluation of dementia care interventions including the evaluation of PPI approaches and their impact on intervention design and outcomes Strategies to engage and support caregivers in the co design and evaluation of dementia care interventions including best practices in recruitment training and building capacity The evaluation of the impact of stakeholder engagement on the acceptability feasibility effectiveness and sustainability of dementia care research and interventions Ethical and practical considerations in the use of participatory and co design approaches to dementia care research and practice development Suitable theoretically sound frameworks to inform and guide the engagement of people with dementia and their family members in research that intends to enhance their lives
