My Mourning Routine

When my mother died, I had a "Mourning Routine" which consisted of mourning clothes, death candles in my room, and the place, not clothes, in which I sat. My only intention was to feel close to her, to feel that she was still around me.

It wasn't until sometime afterwards, in private, that I began to focus on the spiritual side and prayer for the day. Even a small time each day (perhaps 10 minutes) can be a great preparation to your sitting and contemplation.

The routine also strongly involved a lot of coffee and eating and to spend time, perhaps 10 minutes, in the morning, frequently meditating and taking care of personal hygiene before practicing a structured craft for the day.

These small, consistent steps made a difference in mourning and continued to help me.
