1. A fully charged and otherwise undamaged battery must always be used when testing the electrical system.
2. Test the battery with an ohm tester. The battery disconnect switch should be turned off.
3. When testing a battery, make sure that the battery is connected with the correct polarity.
4. When charging batteries, connected in series, make sure they are of equal capacity. For example, 2 batteries of 100 Ah. The batteries should have the same age (battery quality) as the charging current required to reach a certain voltage varies with battery age.
5. If a damaged battery is required to start the engine, the instructions in the Operator's Manual must be strictly followed. See also Safety.
6. Before any tests are performed on the alternator or regulators, check the battery and electrical leads for defective insulation, loose connections and corrosion. When the alternator fails, all possible defects described above must be corrected before starting electrical checks.
7. For all testing of alternating current equipment, use "Source" connections in order to prevent sparks and voltage transients. A fuse holder may result in deactivation of both the alternator and regulator.
8. Never disconnect the alternator leads while the engine is running. This could damage both the alternator and regulator.
9. If the current alternator output setting should be increased to the chassis, voltage may occur in the alternator and regulator.
10. When removing or fitting components in the electrical system, the chassis connection should be interrupted in the battery disconnect switch (not cut off).
11. For electric welding on the machine or its attachments see Machine.

  - a) ground connection turned off with battery disconnect switch;

The machine has a 24 V electrical system with two 12 volt batteries located on each side of the rear frame behind the rear wheels.

The battery disconnect switch is located under the radiator cooling.

Chassis lead is located in the fuse box in the engine compartment. The fuse box contains the main fuse for the electrical distribution box and fuses for the preheating coil and starter motor.

Relays and fuses are placed in the electrical distribution box behind the operator's seat and are accessible when the cover is opened. On the inside of the cover, a label showing which component/consuming device is connected to regulation voltage and fuse. No relay in the electrical distribution box are interchangeable.

The components are marked according to function group. The first digit in the marking, i.e. 1000, indicates that the component belongs to engine lighting. All other digits are sequential numbers. There are also components with a four-digit designation, in which the first two digits indicate function group and the other indicate sequential numbers.
