Design Brief

THERE SHOULD ALWAYS BE A DESIGN BRIEF

Before the PCTWC or the TWU have to write the brief. They just have to make sure a suitable brief has been produced.

It should be written in conjunction with all those involved, i.e. project manager, TWU, foreman, operatives, etc. The amount of effort required to complete the brief should be relative to the complexity of the scheme. If the author of the brief i.e. has a solution they wish to see that should be stated in the brief. On the other hand if the author doesn't have a proposed plan, that is OK, and the designer can provide suitable concepts and solutions to suit.

The more relevant information supplied in the brief, the better. Issuing SOGs of information to the designer is not helpful and is unlikely to lead to a good outcome. Taking the time to identify what matters is

Parts include:

- Do you have a preference in system used, i.e. structural steel, proprietary propping, materials already available on site?
- Any pertinent information related to the expected conditions on site when the TW will be used?
- Frequent programmes,
- Access and egress requirements?
- Site boundaries,
- Anything unusual about the site, i.e. it floods, or there have been cases of vandalism, for hot works are permitted, etc. Things out of the ordinary.
- Any permanent works interfaces,
