Traditional Maps—Traditional maps reflect the traditional knowledge of a community, its culture, and its environment. These maps are highly detailed, showing intricate features such as settlements, resources, paths, and boundaries. They are used to navigate through the environment and to communicate about the environment. They are also used to plan and organize activities such as hunting, fishing, and agriculture. These maps are often passed down through generations and are considered a valuable part of the community's cultural heritage.
