2.5 Membrane Permeability

What Can Cross the Membrane?

Types of molecules that cross the membrane:

- Small nonpolar molecules (like O_2 and CO_2) can diffuse directly through the phospholipid bilayer without any help. These molecules are small and nonpolar.
- Small polar uncharged molecules (like water) can diffuse through the membrane in small amounts, but they move more slowly. These molecules are small and polar, but they are not charged.
- Large polar molecules and ions (like glucose, amino acids, Na^+ , and K^+) cannot cross the membrane on their own. They need transport proteins to help them cross. These molecules are large and polar, and they are charged.

The hydrophobic tails of the phospholipids are the main barrier to the passage of most molecules. The small, nonpolar molecules can cross the membrane more easily than the large, polar molecules.

How Different Molecules Cross the Membrane

Molecule Type	Examples	How it Crosses	Needs Transport Protein?
Small nonpolar	O_2 , CO_2 , N_2	Directly through the phospholipid bilayer	No
Small polar uncharged	Water	Through the phospholipid bilayer (slowly)	Yes (aquaporins)
Large polar	Glucose, amino acids	Through transport proteins	Yes
Ions	Na^+ , K^+ , Cl^-	Through transport proteins	Yes

1.5 Representing a Quantitative Variable with Graphs

Remember that a quantitative variable is a variable that can be measured and has a numerical value. Quantitative variables can be represented by graphs.

- A dot plot is a graph that shows the distribution of a quantitative variable. It is a horizontal line with tick marks representing the values of the variable. Dots are placed above the tick marks to represent the frequency of each value.
- A histogram is a graph that shows the distribution of a quantitative variable. It is a bar chart where the height of each bar represents the frequency of the values in a specific interval.

The shape of the distribution can tell you a lot about the data. A symmetric distribution is one where the left and right sides are mirror images. A skewed distribution is one where one side is longer than the other. A uniform distribution is one where the values are spread out evenly.
