

It's your second assignment to our marketing team, and I'd like to make sure that you're prepared. Before we start, though, you'll need to understand a few things about our marketing team. Fortunately, I've got a few notes from the team's last meeting that should help you get a better idea of what you're getting into.

Figure 10. Approximate changes in percentage total tree mortality. A tree was classed as dead if at least 50% of its aboveground volume was gone (dead). The percentage of living trees increased in older stages of the forest transition, although tree mortality increased as well. The data are used to fit curves to describe these relationships. These predictions are shown as dashed lines in the estimation. The tree life expectancy, given complete tree removal, is given by the number of years that a tree can survive. These are estimates derived from growth history data for each species. Death rates were calculated as the number of trees that die per year that have survived for at least one year, as shown in the bottom panel.

Because of the high degree of specialization of the industry, no single road, highway, or other transportation mode can be substituted for the others. However, the different modes of transportation have different strengths and weaknesses, and a particular mode may be more appropriate for one purpose than for another. Thus, the choice of mode depends on the purpose of the trip.
