Earth's Interior Layers

To review:

- The Earth is not entirely the same all the way throughout the inside of the planet. Instead, Earth is made up of distinct layers that have their own characteristics and composition. This means they are made of different materials and behave differently from one another.
- We can use seismic waves (shakes caused by tectonic activity) to Earth's layers. We can use these waves to look inside Earth's layers. Seismic waves travel through the Earth's interior to tell us what the inside of the Earth is like.
- There are three different types of waves: - compressional waves:
  - Compressional waves travel through the crust, upper mantle, and lower mantle. They travel through the continental crust. This means that it is common to continents with a continental plate, it will travel through it is process called refraction.
  - Compressional waves travel through the ocean floor. In the ocean bed these waves travel through the ocean floor. They means that it is common to oceans with a oceanic crust. They means that it is common to continents with a continental plate, it will travel through the ocean floor.
- Destructively the crust is the thickest layer of the Earth's interior, the mantle. If this crust is melted but becomes like a liquid due to being too hot, will under pressure. There are two distinct parts of the mantle:
  - The upper mantle (asthenosphere) and the lower mantle.
- The asthenosphere and crust stick together - this is called the lithosphere. When we refer to tectonic plates, we are referring to the lithosphere.
- Plate movement is caused by convection currents in the lower mantle.

• The lower mantle, rock moves up and down. When it moves it will pull up
