The Seven Secrets of Successful Coaches

By Jeff Janssen, M.S., Peak Performance Coach

Have you ever wondered why some coaches achieve so much success with their teams - winning championships and everyone's respect along the way - while others continually fall short or struggle to get their teams to play over .500? If you are like most coaches, you have probably found yourself both fascinated and frustrated by the following questions:

- How do some coaches build and maintain championship level programs year after year even though everyone else is trying desperately to knock them off?
- How do some coaches come in and resurrect losing programs with a long and demoralizing history of defeat and quickly bring them to a championship level?
- How do some coaches consistently get the most out of their athletes while others have athletes who chronically underachieve?
- How do some coaches gain their athletes' confidence, trust, and respect while others have athletes who never "buy in" to the coach and what he or she is trying to accomplish?

To answer many of these intriguing and important coaching questions, my friend Greg Dale and I interviewed many of sport's top coaches including Mike Krzyzewski, Pat Summitt, Roy Williams, Gary Barnett, Marty Schottenheimer, Mike Candrea, Mary Wise, and several others. Based on our interviews, we discovered a new style of coaching, we call credible coaching, that is helping coaches get the absolute most out of today's athletes. Unlike the traditional style of coaching which used fear and intimidation to motivate athletes, credible coaching focuses on developing solid relationships with athletes based on trust and respect. Coach "K" probably said it best in our interview with him - "Coaching is about relationships. It goes way beyond x's and o's. You have to create an environment of trust among your staff and athletes. Without trust, you have nothing. If you do have trust, you will be able to accomplish great things."

Credible coaching has seven primary components associated with it which we call the Seven Secrets of Successful Coaches. As you look
