

All types waves including water transfer energy without matter. This means that the matter doesn't move along with the energy. For example, the water vibrates up and down, but when the wave passes, the water returns to its original position. (The water moves up and down, but doesn't move forward.)

Transverse Waves: In the transverse motion, the matter moves up and down or sideways (perpendicular) to the direction of the wave. This motion is perpendicular and opposite to each other up and down (perpendicular) motion. All perpendicular motion includes they travel through.

Transverse waves transfer energy and matter motion.

Energy transferred in the direction of wave

Transverse waves transfer energy (up and down) but do not transfer matter.

Waves can go through things, move up through water, light waves can go through materials, sound waves can go through matter. If it goes through something, it is a wave.

Two Types of Waves

Transverse waves: (vibrates moving up and down or up and down) — moves perpendicular to the direction of the wave. (Transverse waves transfer energy, moving forward, but the matter is moving up and down.)

Longitudinal waves: (vibrates moving forward and backward) — moves parallel to the direction of the wave. (Longitudinal waves transfer energy, moving forward, but the matter is moving forward and backward.)

Transverse Wave (Perpendicular to direction of wave)

Longitudinal Wave (Parallel to direction of wave)

Transverse and longitudinal waves are both transverse and longitudinal waves. If the transverse waves do not move through.

Speed and Wavelength

Waves move with different speeds and different wavelengths.

Wave Speed: Wavelength (W) — the length of one cycle of the wave.
 Wavelength (W) — the length of one cycle of the wave.
 Wavelength (W) — the length of one cycle of the wave.

The Speed of a Wave
Wavelength (W)	Period (T)
Frequency (F)	Wavelength (W)
