"The Space of Words" Jennifer Miller Hoyer,2014 Nelly Sachs 1891 1970 has long been regarded as one of the most significant Holocaust poets Her conception of language and words as a landscape has been understood by scholars and critics as an exilic ersatz Heimat for the lost German homeland of a displaced poet This reading however is based entirely on her postwar poems Such an isolated approach to her complex body of work is increasingly historically problematic it is also at odds with Sachs s generally cyclical poetic process In The Space of Words Jennifer Hoyer offers the first sustained critical analysis of Sachs s largely unanalyzed prewar poetry and prose as well as the first analysis that examines structural and thematic ties between the prewar works and the Nobel Prize winning postwar poetry Through close readings of both Sachs s prewar and postwar works Hoyer reveals a diasporic rather than exilic conception of the landscape of language a position of constant wandering rather than static longing for return This diasporic poetics promotes the intellectual and linguistic power of the wanderer and opens new insights into Sachs s essential significance as a Holocaust poet and a twentieth century German Jewish writer wary of the link of literary language to geopolitics and the narrative of nations Jennifer M Hoyer is Assistant Professor of German at the University of Arkansas
