we gather of the gentle skipper of the Ark the two men have much in common And Doctor Hornaday is almost as well known his name is familiar not only to thousands of visitors to the New York Zoological Park but to hosts who have read his books It is probable that if a vote were taken the blue ribbon as the most popular Zoological Park Director in the world He has occupied his position for about 26 years during this time having been engaged in the study of wild animals in captivity This present book is the result of his experience It is packed with first hand stories disclosing the habits of his numerous boarders their mentality and the various emotions and traits shown by close observation Strictly speaking it is not a scientific book and is not intended to be In a sense it is greater His book is a very human book and if we are to understand it as it deserves to be understood we must separate it from purely technical works and regard it as one of those rare books in which we are made to feel the unity of nature that Man himself is not alone a spectator carrying about with him the exclusive privilege of patronizing the rest of creation but is only a fraction of the whole The World s Work An insight into the minds and manners of animals that is possessed by few men today What he has discovered about his charges in all these years he has compiled into a fascinating volume that is brimful of anecdotes and adventures No moving picture could outdo the graphic description that Dr Hornaday s pen achieves Country Life Few individuals are more competent to explain animal intelligence than Mr Hornaday He tells how animals talk which are the most intelligent of the wisdom of the serpent the manlikeness of the chimpanzee of animal morals of their plays and pastimes and of the outcasts and criminals among them Publishers Weekly
