Sour Gas Well Forces Residents Out Again

Residents of the Wallace well area were forced to leave their homes again last week when they had to be evacuated once more Friday night.

By yesterday morning (Wednesday) those who live near the well were still not allowed to remain in their homes.

After 8 a.m. Friday night, it was reported that a clicking sound was heard. Then came a loud bang. It is believed that the circulating mud settled off the floors that burned off the well.

The well was equipped with automatic igniters, however, the equipment apparently failed to re-light the flames. When authorities from NRC Oil Corp. were called, none could readily be heard in reports.

Evacuation was begun about 1 a.m. of a four mile radius around the well.
