Here is a new book jam packed with information on color and pigments and painting by the author of Watercolor Right from the Start. Designed to overlap her earlier book as well as to advance into territory of great interest to artists the subject of color. Color Right from the Start adopts the design the how to format and the progression of lessons that have already proven popular with Page's readers. Thus it provides a familiar foundation for lessons on the color spectrum why colors produce certain optical effects what paints are made of why they behave as they do when they're wet when they're dry and much more all lavishly illustrated. If you want to construct your own color charts color wheels for light and for pigments and color mixing maps Hilary Page shows you how. If you want to test your pigments for their special properties how the pigment particles settle on paper how well the paint serves as a glaze or in wet on wet application she tells you exactly how to proceed. In subsequent lessons she focuses on each major hue from gray to yellow and on through red and blue to green primary colors secondary colors and neutrals. These lessons reinforce all the concepts the author has explained earlier as she demonstrates the uses of color in specific paintings. Most of these demonstrations develop in a step by step easy to follow manner. You will not only understand the evolution of a picture's color scheme but also follow the mixing and application of the paints themselves. Watercolor techniques are demonstrated to show off the pigments and to achieve desired color effects. It's one thing to read what simultaneous contrast is it's another to make it work for you in a watercolor that you paint with the pigments you actually own. Color Right from the Start carefully explains some sophisticated concepts and is written to give artists just the depth of knowledge they need to be well informed. Beginners will want this book so that they can attain a basic hands on knowledge of color. This makes the book useful also as a reference tool for the more advanced artist. Providing all the practice that a beginner needs to fully grasp the magic of color in his or her own work. Color Right from the Start also serves as a lively refresher course as well.

Color Fields Diana T. Witcher,2016 The goal of this report is to identify what designers today need to know or understand about color and consequently what design educators should be teaching design students about color While designers use color intuitively like artists they also use color instrumentally as a means of communication and a medium for creation Fine arts paint mixing models of instruction have long dominated color education for designers While traditional color education holds much value I propose that today designers need a more complete understanding which includes color theory color systems color materials and color management Design educators therefore need to teach more about the practical use of color in practice color management color science color systems and color standards such as CIE Pantone NCS and Munsell that are used today in design commerce and industry I seek to help designers and educators achieve a more comprehensive understanding of color through a series of artifacts designed to illustrate color concepts and through a curated list of existing print and online color resources These artifacts and resources provide methods for design educators to teach a more contemporary comprehensive and practice based understanding of color The artifacts at the center of this project are didactic toys that demonstrate important concepts in color theory and form a system that illustrates the technical and practical aspects of color as well as an updated framework for understanding color and its production
