The Great Depression was a severe economic downturn that began in 1929 and lasted until the mid-1930s. It was characterized by widespread unemployment, poverty, and a collapse in consumer spending.

The New Deal was a series of programs and policies implemented by President Franklin D. Roosevelt to provide relief, recovery, and reform during the Great Depression.

The New Deal was designed to provide immediate relief to the unemployed and the poor, to create jobs through public works projects, and to establish a system of social insurance to protect against future economic downturns.

The Social Security Act was a key component of the New Deal, establishing a system of social insurance that provided benefits to the elderly, the unemployed, and the disabled.

The New Deal also included the National Industrial Recovery Act, which established the National Recovery Administration (NRA) to regulate the economy and promote fair competition.

The New Deal was a landmark period in American history, and its legacy is still felt today. It established the federal government as a major force in the economy and created a social safety net that has helped millions of Americans.

The New Deal was a response to the crisis of the Great Depression, and it helped to bring the economy back to a state of growth and stability. It was a time of great change and innovation in American government and society.
