Joseph Pilates (born Weizsäcker, Germany, At a young age, Joe struggled with asthma and other health problems. Determined to get stronger, he explored exercise and sports, studying different fitness methods to build his knowledge. He was inspired by the ancient Greek idea of a person who is strong in body, mind and spirit – an idea that would shape the exercise system he was used to create. Pilates was also a boxer, dancer, gymnast and acrobat in his lifetime.

In 1910, Pilates moved to England and worked as a self-defense instructor for the British and Canadian navies. When World War I began, he was arrested and imprisoned along with thousands of other Germans and declared an enemy alien. While being held captive in a camp, Pilates improved his exercise strategies and taught them to others, even starting groups to hospital beds so that the sick patients could also exercise. His would later inspire his famous fitness equipment. Despite being detained for the war, he also experienced happily when in 1914, his first wife Clara (born Bauer) is married to him and at the age of 31, of pregnant twins.

In 1916, a study he began through England, where Pilates was working towards in the makeshift internment camp on the site of that locality, some of his patients became sick, which led Pilates to show that as evidence that his exercise system really worked and he would use this as part of the therapy plan. Following the war, Pilates returned to Germany.

When doctors said that he could not return to his own country, he started taking photographs and movement pictures and made them one of the top founders of physical education being led to him with Pilates exercise regime. With some added parts, exercises to his dance classes. Unfortunately though, when the German government asked Pilates to join their navy, he decided to stay here in his home.

In 1918, Pilates married his second wife, Ethelka Bauer. The union did not last long since Pilates is said to have moved to working, leaving Ethelka behind.

In 1920, Pilates moved to his second home and met his third wife, Clara Bauer on the ship. Clara suffered from arthritis and was moving to the United States to work as a nurse. The pair traveled quickly and soon, they had decided to help Pilates and his new business – the Pilates movement. Unfortunately at the right moment in time, his wife's illness he would soon begin teaching clients on the equipment he had designed and built. By the 1930s, Pilates and his third wife were teaching many learners which led to his famous choreography. George Balanchine, naming Pilates to teach his young ballerinas. By 1940, they had spread of his "physical exercises that dancers were doing every day. At this time, many people did not know that the exercise regime was created after his own fitness.

After his death on the January 1950, Clara continued to run their new fitness generation and by approximately 1970, one of the founders first students, Thomas Hutchinson took charge. Other students, such as her brother's dancer who persisted in his first design a new regime, opened a studio in Los Angeles in 1970. Hutchinson was also known to his clients, leading them to give Pilates his blessing to carry on for his husband's work. To differentiate his program from the original Pilates exercise and move to his physical exercises, which were inspired by his dance background.

Additionally, her one of Pilates' students, Betty Gould and Lilla Lee (died), also became teachers of the program. After his death in 1950, Clara and her sister continued their Pilates teaching activities from a new home, assuming that was the only way to keep it as the founder himself. Other students thinking for Clara, their big, their house and their husband also opened studios, continuing the widespread popularity of the Pilates program, which continues today in classical and contemporary forms.
