Abstract: ‘Human Capital Development’, needs to be treated as the best investment for a developing country like Sri Lanka with regard to social mobility, educational and employment opportunities and global industry. Investment on Human Capital development is to be done mainly through Education and, if Sri Lanka to sustain in highly competitive employment sphere in future, both at local and international levels, education should provide the required skills, knowledge and attitudes for the future citizens through a systematic, carefully developed curriculum. Further, English language education has been identified as one of the crucial and essential components to be improved, when facing global competitiveness. Hence, this study focused on exploring the possibility of developing an English Language Curriculum based on the validated Level Descriptors in order to create competent users of the English language who can easily surpass the communication challenges in 21st-century world. Communication ability of the learners in English language within the general education system has been a popular research area in Sri Lanka and the findings have revealed that the performance level of the students is considerably low and unsatisfactory. Since, the majority of Sri Lankan students gain English language ability mainly within their classroom settings, the necessity of developing a curriculum with solid objectives that directly facilitate the learners’ target performance, has been felt a need over the past few years. Accordingly, within this study, identifying the issues with the existing curriculum, selecting a suitable curriculum model, developing the curriculum, obtaining feedback from the stakeholders and evaluating the developed curriculum based on the reviewers’ feedback were considered. The findings of the study were more towards the positive trend and close alignment of all key institutes of education, proper teacher training and monitoring system and equal distribution of resources among schools are at the central attention for a successful implementation of the proposed curriculum. This study was conducted using the mixed method and six-staged research design was adapted to achieve the objectives of the study. 30
