

Lesson 7 The Writing Process: Story

Some story writers like to use settings and situations they have experienced themselves. Others like to go beyond themselves and use exaggeration to create funny, often wild, worlds. Use the writing process and see what kind of world you can create.

Prewrite

Look again at the story ideas you wrote on pages 62 and 63. Choose one of those ideas, or another idea that you like, and begin to develop it. Whether you are writing a realistic story or a tall tale, you will need to pay special attention to your main character. Use this idea web to record details about how he or she looks, acts, speaks, and so on.

Before you continue, consider these questions about your setting and plot.

- What is the setting of your story? Consider place or location, season, time of day, weather conditions, and so on.
- What is the character's problem?
- What does the character do to try to solve the problem? Does it take more than one try? What is the final solution or outcome?
