For Beginners

Most and most of sewing machines differ in layout and features, but the basic parts are similar. Your machine's manual should show a detailed diagram of your specific model. If you don't have a manual, check the manufacturer's website. Often, manuals can be found in the "Customer Support" section of the manufacturer's website. The zigzag stitch is basically a straight stitch modified to contain some width.

This is the stitch you want to use for applying binding or binding something (like a button) or for buttonholes. You can also use this stitch like a straight stitch when you're working with bias, to give some stretch in the sewing. The zigzag stitch can be wide, or you can shorten the stitch length to make it tight.

Blind Hem Stitch

This stitch is used for securing items that shouldn't be seen (hence, "blind").

The stitches are secured in the back of the fabric, and so are not visible from the front. It does require a special foot and a special technique.

The basting stitch is just like the straight stitch, but set to an extra long length.

It's used to secure items together temporarily – so they stay in place as you plan for final sewing. The basting stitch can also be manipulated in a special way to create gathers.

Finally, this stitch is our defense against the ravaging edge.

The overcasting stitch is similar to the zigzag, but is normally used on the edge of a seam to prevent fabric from fraying at the raw edges. It can also be used to finish a hem edge. Check the seams of some of your ready-to-wear knit clothing; you'll find an overcast edge that encases the seam to prevent fraying.
