

THIS cause of a war and the object of a war—not necessarily the same. The cause of this war is the invasion of Luxembourg and Belgium. We declared war because we were forced by treaty to declare war. We have been pledged to protect the integrity of Belgium since the Kingdom of Belgium has existed. If the Germans had not broken the guarantees they entered with us to respect the neutrality of these little States we should certainly not be at war at the present time. The fortified eastern frontier of France could have been held against any attack without any help from us. We had no obligations and no interests there. We were pledged to France simply to protect her from a naval attack by us; but the Germans had already given us an undertaking not to make such an attack. It was our Belgian treaty and the sudden outrage on Luxembourg that precipitated us into this conflict. No power in the world would have respected our Flag or accepted our national word again if we had not fought.

So much for the immediate cause of the war.

BUT now we come to the object of this war. We began to fight because our honour and our pledge obliged us; but as soon as we are embarked upon the fighting we have to ask ourselves what is the end at which

BRITISH COMMANDER ARRIVES

Sir John French, with his personal staff, left London on August 14, and travelled straight through the Aosta valley. When he landed on French soil, his army had reached Bapaume and the other banks, still was making its way towards its battle positions.

WHY BRITAIN WENT TO WAR

By H. G. Wells

Following is the article which Mr. Wells wrote for "The War Illustrated" of August 22, 1914. The Editor will regard this as the most effective brief statement, published at that time or since, of the British attitude to the War.

over fighting aims. We cannot simply put the Germans back over the Belgian border and tell them not to do it again. We find ourselves at war with that huge military empire, with which we have been doing our best to keep the peace since first it rose upon the ruins of French Imperialism in 1870. And war is mortal combat. We have now either to destroy or be destroyed. We have not sought this reckoning, we have done our utmost to avoid it; but now that it has been forced upon us it is imperative that it should be a thorough reckoning. This is a war that touches every man and every home in each of the combatant countries. It is a war, as Mr. Sidney Lowe has said, not of soldiers but of whole peoples. And it is a war that must be fought to such a finish that every man in each of the nations engaged understands what has happened. There can be no diplomatic settlement that will leave German Imperialism free to expand any of its efforts to its people and start new conquests. We have to go on until we do absolutely done or, or until the Germans as a people know that they are beaten, and are convinced that they have had enough of war.

We are fighting Germany. But we are fighting without any hatred of the German people. We do not intend to destroy either their freedom or their unity. But we have to destroy an evil system of government and the mental and material corruption that has got hold of the German imagination and taken possession of German life. We have to smash the Prussian Imperialism as thoroughly as Germany in 1871 smashed the rotten Imperialism of Napoleon III. And also we have to learn from the failure of that victory to avoid a vindictive triumph.

This Prussian Imperialism has been for forty years an intolerable nuisance in the earth. Even since the crushing of the French in 1871 the evil thing has grown and cast its spreading shadow over Europe. Germany has preached a propaganda of ruthless force and political materialism to the whole weary world. "Blood and Iron," also known, was the current of her unity, and almost as openly the little, mean, aggressive statesmen and professors who have guided her destinies to this present conflict have preached cynicism and the disregard of any code but materialistic social ends, as though it were religion. And just as much as good may be made into a Curse, physical and moral brutality has indeed become a curse in the German mind, and spread from Germany throughout the world. I could wish it were possible to prove that English and American "gentility" had altogether escaped the contagion. But at least we shall ourselves free and soon upon this becoming无可避免 to rid the world of it. The whole world is tired of it. And—Gott!—Gott we perpetually invoked—Gott indeed must be weary of it.

It is already the greatest war in history. It is a war of nations but not individual. It is a war to exercise a world-citizenship and an age.

And note how this Curse of public rotteness has had its secret side. The man who practices cynicism in his own business transactions had better keep a detective and a cash register for his clerks; and it is the most natural thing

Planning for War at Sea Evan Wilson,Paul M. Waldfogel, 2010-04-08 In 1999 one in four British children lived in poverty the third highest child poverty rate among industrialized countries Five years later the child poverty rate in Britain had fallen by more than half in absolute terms How did the British government accomplish this and what can the United States learn from the British experience Jane Waldfogel offers a sharp analysis of the New Labour government's anti poverty agenda its dramatic early success and eventual stalled progress Comparing Britain's anti poverty initiative to U S welfare reform the book shows how the policies of both countries have affected child poverty living standards and well being in low income families and suggests next steps for future reforms Britain's War on Poverty evaluates the three pronged anti poverty strategy employed by the British government and what these efforts accomplished British reforms sought to promote work and make work pay to increase financial support for families with children and to invest in the health early life development and education of children The latter two features set the British reforms apart from the work oriented U S welfare reforms which did not specifically target income or program supports for children Plagued by premature initiatives and what some experts called an overly ambitious agenda the British reforms fell short of their intended goal but nevertheless significantly increased single parent employment raised incomes for low income families and improved child outcomes Poverty has fallen and the pattern of low income family expenditures on child enrichment and healthy food has begun to converge with higher income families As Waldfogel sees it further success in reducing child poverty in Britain will rely on understanding who is poor and who is at highest risk More than half of poor children live in families where at least one parent is working followed by unemployed single and two parent homes respectively Poverty rates are also notably higher for children with disabled parents large families and for Pakistani and Bangladeshi children Based on these demographics Waldfogel argues that future reforms must among other goals raise working family incomes provide more work for single parents and better engage high risk racial and ethnic minority groups What can the United States learn from the British example Britain's War on Poverty is a primer in the triumphs and pitfalls of protracted policy Notable differences distinguish the British and U S models but Waldfogel asserts that a future U S poverty agenda must specifically address child poverty and the income inequality that helps create it By any measurement and despite obstacles Britain has significantly reduced child poverty The book's key lesson is that it can be done *Economic and Social History of the World War.
