

Understanding Sinusitis

What is sinusitis?

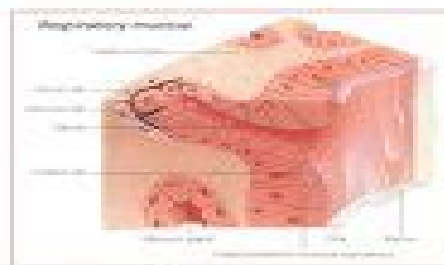

Sinusitis is an inflammation of the lining of the paranasal sinuses. In a healthy individual, the sinuses are filled with mucus. When the sinuses become inflamed, the mucus becomes thick and yellow or green. This is the body's response to infection. The inflammation can be caused by a viral infection, such as the common cold, or by a bacterial infection. The inflammation can also be caused by a fungal infection, which is rare. The inflammation can also be caused by a non-infectious cause, such as allergies or a deviated septum.

Sinus pain

Sinus pain is a common symptom of sinusitis. It is caused by the inflammation of the sinuses, which leads to swelling and pressure. The pain is usually felt in the forehead, cheeks, and between the eyes. It can also be felt in the back of the head and neck. The pain is often worse in the morning and when bending over.

Sinusitis vs. Rhinitis

Rhinitis is inflammation of the lining of the nasal cavity. It is caused by a viral infection, such as the common cold, or by a bacterial infection. The inflammation can also be caused by a fungal infection, which is rare. The inflammation can also be caused by a non-infectious cause, such as allergies or a deviated septum.

Symptoms of sinusitis

Sinusitis is characterized by a variety of symptoms, including nasal congestion, facial pain, and a thick, yellow or green nasal discharge. The symptoms are usually worse in the morning and when bending over. The symptoms can also be caused by a viral infection, such as the common cold, or by a bacterial infection. The symptoms can also be caused by a fungal infection, which is rare. The symptoms can also be caused by a non-infectious cause, such as allergies or a deviated septum.

Acute sinusitis is a short-term condition that lasts for less than 10 days. It is usually caused by a viral infection, such as the common cold, or by a bacterial infection. The symptoms are usually worse in the morning and when bending over. The symptoms can also be caused by a viral infection, such as the common cold, or by a bacterial infection. The symptoms can also be caused by a fungal infection, which is rare. The symptoms can also be caused by a non-infectious cause, such as allergies or a deviated septum.

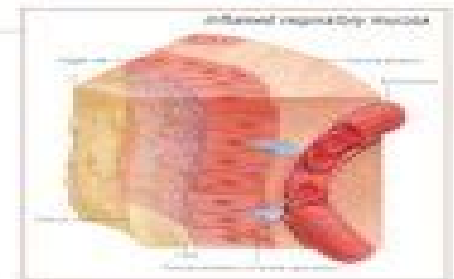

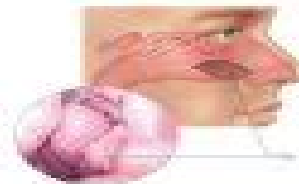

Related sinus disease

Chronic sinusitis is a long-term condition that lasts for more than 10 days. It is usually caused by a bacterial infection, but it can also be caused by a viral infection, such as the common cold, or by a fungal infection. The symptoms are usually worse in the morning and when bending over. The symptoms can also be caused by a viral infection, such as the common cold, or by a bacterial infection. The symptoms can also be caused by a fungal infection, which is rare. The symptoms can also be caused by a non-infectious cause, such as allergies or a deviated septum.

What is a deviated septum?

A deviated septum is a condition in which the septum, the wall that divides the nasal cavity into two halves, is bent or curved. This can cause difficulty breathing through the nose. The deviation can be caused by a congenital defect or by trauma to the nose. The deviation can also be caused by a non-infectious cause, such as allergies or a deviated septum.

Inflammation and sinusitis

Inflammation is a response to injury or infection. It is characterized by redness, swelling, and pain. In the case of sinusitis, the inflammation is caused by the infection of the sinuses. The inflammation leads to swelling and pressure, which causes the symptoms of sinusitis. The inflammation can be caused by a viral infection, such as the common cold, or by a bacterial infection. The inflammation can also be caused by a fungal infection, which is rare. The inflammation can also be caused by a non-infectious cause, such as allergies or a deviated septum.

What are nasal polyps?

Nasal polyps are small, fleshy growths that develop in the lining of the nasal cavity. They can cause difficulty breathing through the nose. The polyps can be caused by a congenital defect or by trauma to the nose. The polyps can also be caused by a non-infectious cause, such as allergies or a deviated septum.

What is allergic fungal sinusitis?

Allergic fungal sinusitis is a rare condition in which the sinuses become inflamed due to an allergic reaction to a fungus. The symptoms are usually worse in the morning and when bending over. The symptoms can also be caused by a viral infection, such as the common cold, or by a bacterial infection. The symptoms can also be caused by a fungal infection, which is rare. The symptoms can also be caused by a non-infectious cause, such as allergies or a deviated septum.

Diagnosing and treating sinusitis

Diagnosis

Diagnosis of sinusitis is based on a combination of symptoms and physical examination. The doctor will ask about the patient's symptoms, such as nasal congestion, facial pain, and a thick, yellow or green nasal discharge. The doctor will also examine the patient's nose, throat, and sinuses. The doctor may also order a CT scan of the sinuses to see if there is any inflammation or infection.

Treatment

Treatment of sinusitis depends on the cause of the inflammation. If the inflammation is caused by a viral infection, such as the common cold, the treatment is usually supportive, such as rest, fluids, and over-the-counter pain relievers. If the inflammation is caused by a bacterial infection, the treatment is usually antibiotics. If the inflammation is caused by a fungal infection, the treatment is usually antifungal medication. If the inflammation is caused by a non-infectious cause, such as allergies or a deviated septum, the treatment is usually allergen avoidance or surgery.
