

Advantages for Users/Programs

Users: Many features, such as protected sharing, allow various applications to work together transparently without the low efficiency that can result before the individual facilities. A single interface is sufficient to protect their code, handling of the most workings of an underlying system, or the maintenance of their code, the subsequent implementation of the interface (including virtualisation) is abstracted away from the user, and the user can benefit from a single, simplified, interface.

Programs: Users can share applications, and share the underlying system, as well as the ability to use the system to manage their code. The underlying system is transparently managed, and the user can benefit from a single, simplified, interface.
