Winged Morning Glories

My Mourning Routine

Living with chronic illness and neurodegenerative disease, maintaining a mourning routine feels as simple as my routine before my diagnosis was diagnosed. But that will only maintain my health and not coping my grief.

I started with gratitude journaling to practice that again. The focus on the positives will not diminish for that day. But I could only take my emotional support out of my grief process to help coping and maintaining.

The routine also includes reading a copy of coffee with honey. It is a great book, written by a woman who has experienced this same journey. It is a great book, written by a woman who has experienced this same journey. It is a great book, written by a woman who has experienced this same journey.

These small, consistent steps make a difference in coping and support in my life.
