[4] Some people, especially in the U.S., are concerned that the use of computers, rather than their hands, in the type of repetitive and fast work in assembly lines, for example, will eventually reduce the need for human workers. These people do not usually realize how few jobs in the world are actually done by hand. In most cases, the use of computers and other tools helps people to do their work more efficiently and accurately, and usually makes the work more enjoyable. In fact, the use of computers and other tools has helped to create many new jobs in the service industry, such as in the fields of health care, education, and entertainment. In addition, the use of computers and other tools has helped to create many new jobs in the manufacturing industry, such as in the fields of electronics, aerospace, and automotive.
