INTRODUCTION

BRIEF BIOGRAPHY OF JOSEPH BRUCHAC

Joseph Bruchac was raised by his maternal grandparents in the foothills of the Adirondack Mountains in upstate New York. He holds a B.A. from Cornell University, an M.A. in Literature and Creative Writing from Syracuse University, and a Ph.D. in Comparative Literature. Though Bruchac also has English and Slovak ancestry, he says that his northeastern American Indian heritage has more influenced him the most. Along with his younger sister, Margaret, and his two adult sons, James and Jesse, Bruchac is heavily involved in projects for preserving Algonquian language and culture, including a musical group called the Shawano Singers. Bruchac has written more than 300 books for both adults and children. Some of these include Shooting Silence (winner of an American Book Award), Songs from a Historical Novel, collections of traditional Native American stories, and poetry. He has been awarded the Lifetime Achievement Award from the Native Writers Circle of the Americas, as well as the Virginia Hamilton Literary Award for his contributions to children's multicultural literature. He lives in Greenfield Center, New York.

HISTORICAL CONTEXT

The Navajo people (or Diné, which means "The People") probably moved into the American Southwest around 1,000 years ago. They may have been connected to the Athabaskan people of Alaska. They settled in the area that's known today as the Four Corners region—where New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, and Utah come together. The Navajo see this region as being founded by four sacred mountains. The enslavement of many American Indians by the Spanish was a catastrophic event for the Navajo people. When United States settlers moved into this region, rather than fleeing the Navajos, they decided to wage war against them. The Navajos were brutally defeated and held for several years in what became known as the Long Walk, an event that's often compared to the Cherokee Trail of Tears. In the late 1800s, they were allowed to return to their homeland, which today makes up the United States' largest Indian reservation. In World War II, the Navajo language was used to create an unbreakable code that was used during some of the heaviest, most consequential fighting in the war's Pacific Theater. Because of the top-secret nature of the code talkers' work, their story was not fully told for almost 25 years after the war's end. In 1945, the novel's main character, Ford Begay, and some of the white warblers in Code Talker are fictional, but the other named characters are based on real people, and Bruchac states that the events described, including those in the boarding school chapters, happened to real people.

RELATED LITERARY WORKS

Joseph Bruchac was prompted to research the code talkers in part because of his earlier work on a book for the National Geographic Society, a study of the Cherokee and Navajo nations called Trail of Tears: Paths of Beauty (2000). This was followed by a picture book called Navajo Long Walk, coauthored with artist Shonto Begay, which tells the story of the Navajo people's forced exile in the 1800s. Under Marathon Station, Bruchac is another novel about a World War II veteran (in this case, a Navajo man) dealing with the aftermath of the war.
