Beginners and Dummies Barbara Dawson,2020-08-18 Meal prepping is making提前 a meal or recipe then portioning it out to store for later. If you've ever kept leftovers from dinner to take with you for lunch the next day, you've learned meal prepping. Generally, though, meal prepping refers to preparing 3-7 days worth of food at once. Think of it like keeping your lunches for the week all at once instead of keeping them separate for breakfast, lunch, and snacks. Meal prepping involves not wasting food and reducing the time it takes to eat meals without having to cook each day. When it comes to meal prepping, not everyone values convenience and efficiency more than variety. With meal prepping, you get to eat the same thing for a few days in a row, so if you don't like leftovers or get bored with the same meal prep for a few days, it's not for you. If having a budget is your top priority, meal prepping is for you. It's generally seen as a way to maximize your time and budget by making meals in bulk. For example, if you have a meal prep budget of $100, it's easier to buy ingredients in bulk and cook them all at once than to buy smaller amounts of ingredients and cook them each day. This is because grocery stores often offer discounts on bulk purchases. Additionally, cooking in bulk can save you time and energy. Instead of spending hours cooking each day, you can spend a few hours cooking a large meal and then portion it out for the week. This can be especially helpful if you have a busy work schedule or if you're trying to eat healthy but don't have much time to cook.
