A Study of User Behaviors and Activities on Online Mental Health Communities Nur Shazwani Kamarudin,2019 Social media is a medium that contains rich information which has been shared by many users every second every day This information can be utilized for various outcomes such as understanding user behaviors learning the effect of social media on a community and developing a decision making system based on the information available With the growing popularity of social networking sites people can freely express their opinions and feelings which results in a tremendous amount of user generated data The rich amount of social media data has opened the path for researchers to study and understand the users behaviors and mental health conditions Several studies have shown that social media provides a means to capture an individual state of mind Given the social media data and related work in this field this work studies the scope of users discussion among online mental health communities In the first part of this dissertation this work focuses on the role of social media on mental health among sexual abuse community It employs natural language processing techniques to extract topics of responses examine how diverse these topics are to answer research questions such as whether responses are limited to emotional support if not what other topics are what the diversity of topics manifests how online response differs from traditional response found in a physical world To answer these questions this work extracts Reddit posts on rape to understand the nature of user responses for this stigmatized topic In the second part of this dissertation this work expands to a broader range of online communities In particular it investigates the potential roles of social media on mental health among five major communities i e trauma and abuse community psychosis and anxiety community compulsive disorders community coping and therapy community and mood disorders community This work studies how people interact with each other in each of these communities and what these online forums provide a resource to users who seek help To understand users behaviors this work extracts Reddit posts on 52 related subcommunities and analyzes the linguistic behavior of each community Experiments in this dissertation show that Reddit is a good medium for users with mental health issues to find related helpful resources Another interesting observation is an interesting topic cluster from users posts which shows that discussion and communication among users help individuals to find proper resources for their problem Moreover results show that the anonymity of users in Reddit allows them to have discussions about different topics beyond social support such as financial and religious support From Deviance to Diagnosis Amy Lynne Johnson, 2023 How Americans think about mental health has changed dramatically over the past several decades Contemporary individuals are now more likely to seek medical treatment take mental health days or talk openly about mental health challenges At the same time stigma around mental illness remains despite destigmatization efforts by biomedical professionals and national organizations People desire social distance from and even fear individuals considered mentally ill and associate mental illness with violence This dissertation examines these cultural trends and their consequences by asking and answering three questions using qualitatively informed computational text analysis and large text datasets 1 What are American cultural ideas about mental health and illness 2 How have they changed over time 3 How do contemporary individuals apply cultural ideas to make sense of their own and others experiences In the first three substantive chapters I employ a custom dataset of more than 100 000 articles discussing mental health and illness from an ideologically and geographically diverse set of newspapers In the first chapter I use topic modeling to track change from 1980 to 2020 in how mental health is depicted in the news and demonstrate how American cultural understandings of mental health and illness fall into four categories or frames mental health and illness as medical and or policy issues mental illness as an explanation for violent behavior and mental health as a normal aspect of everyday experience In the second chapter I extend the methods of the first to describe how the connection between mental illness and violent behavior in the news media perpetuates its status as a deviant and stigmatized category In the third chapter I use novel methods of word embeddings to assess the connotations of mental health terminology I show how Americans interpret mental health experiences as well as less severe disorders like anxiety and depression as genuine and legitimate yet mental illness largely connotes dangerousness and deviance Stereotypes of dangerous mental illness are also not evenly applied but instead linked to both Blackness and masculinity Extending and offering a comparison to the newspaper analysis I also look at discussions of mental health and illness on the social media platform Reddit to study how people talk about their own and others mental health In the fourth substantive chapter I turn to social media to focus on contemporary conversations between everyday individuals I demonstrate that by sharing narratives about their mental health experiences users normalize and universalize mental health and rely on the medical model in their suggestions for how to improve it Yet through a focus on popular psychology and self help social media discussions of mental health position it as an ultimately individual experience Across the full dissertation I illuminate how the public conversation around mental health has shifted over time and how individuals use pieces of that conversation to make sense of and decisions around their own mental health In doing so I unpack the connection between mental health beliefs and behaviors and cultural change

Youth Digital Health and Online

Platforms Martyna Gliniecka, 2024-12-27 Youth Digital Health and Online Platforms focuses on young people's use of the digital platform Reddit for health. Drawing upon dialogism theory, the book explores how young people produce a youth-led discourse of youth digital health different from the adult-led framing represented in youth digital health research policy and service delivery. Peer-led discussions online remain one of the controversial forms of youth digital health associated with negative peer influence or casual teenage talk. This book argues that online peer-led dialogues support young people's agency in health and that young people can benefit from dealing with health issues with peers. The work is based on the digital ethnography of teenagers' subreddits on Reddit and utilises a theoretical framework of dialogism, a linguistic-based theory originated by an early 20th-century Russian philosopher Mikhail Bakhtin. The book introduces the concept of dialogical youth-led youth digital health discourse formed in the peer-led space of Reddit. This youth-led discourse celebrates equality and diversity amongst people, meanings and opinions. It is constructed around three relational elements: socio-material affordances, creative practices, and a plurality of youth voices. Reddit's pseudonymous, anti-authoritarian and egalitarian nature supports the emergence of this youth-led discourse. The book can interest scholars and lecturers in childhood and youth studies, Internet studies, and youth health studies. Professionals such as policymakers, service designers, deliverers, online safety educators, and global youth and health agencies can use evidence-based insights in their work with young people.

Prediction and Analysis of Degree of Suicidal Ideation in Online Content Noah Corinthian Jones, 2020 Machine learning (ML) has increasingly been used to address the growing burden of mental illness and lack of access to quality mental health care. Recently, such models have been applied to online data such as social media postings to augment mental health screening. Despite the potential of these methods, online ML classifiers still perform poorly in multi-class settings. In this thesis, we propose the usage of novel document embeddings and mental health-based user embeddings for triaged suicide risk screening. Machine learning to infer suicide risk and urgency is applied to a dataset of Reddit users in which the risk and urgency labels were derived from crowdsourced consensus. We show that the document embedding approach outperforms count-based baselines and a method based on word importance where important words were identified by domain experts. We examine interpretable features and methods that help to discern and explain risk labels. Finally, we find that using a Latent Dirichlet Allocation (LDA) topic model, that users labeled at risk for suicide post about different topics to the rest of Reddit than non-suicidal users.
