Social Networks And Health Models Methods And Applications:

Social Networks and Health Thomas W. Valente, 2010-03-25 Relationships and the pattern of relationships have a large and varied influence on both individual and group action. The fundamental distinction of social network analysis research is that relationships are of paramount importance in explaining behavior. Because of this, social network analysis offers many exciting tools and techniques for research and practice in a wide variety of medical and public health situations including organizational improvements, understanding risk behaviors, coordinating coalitions, and the delivery of health care services. This book provides an introduction to the major theories, methods, models, and findings of social network analysis research and application. In three sections, it presents a comprehensive overview of the topic: first in a survey of its historical and theoretical foundations, then in practical descriptions of the variety of methods currently in use, and finally in a discussion of its specific applications for behavior change in a public health context. Throughout, the text has been kept clear, concise, and comprehensible, with short mathematical formulas for some key indicators or concepts. Researchers and students alike will find it an invaluable resource for understanding and implementing social network analysis in their own practice. Social Networks and Health Thomas W. Valente, 2010 Providing a comprehensive introduction to how social networks influence health behaviours, this book enables researchers to understand how network data are collected and processed, and how to calculate appropriate metrics and models used to understand network influences on health behaviour. Network

Interventions Thomas W. Valente, 2015-11-25 Social networks are important sources of influence on many personal, organizational, community, and societal behaviors. Network interventions (NIs) are purposeful and planned efforts to use social networks or social network data to generate social influence, accelerate behavior change, improve performance or quality, and/or achieve desirable outcomes among individuals, communities, organizations, or populations. This book is designed to be a guide or primer on how to use the powerful and formal set of mathematical and computational tools developed in the network analysis field to engage individuals, communities, organizations, and/or populations to bring about change. This change can be the spread of information, culture changes, attitude shifts, or accelerating adoption of new behaviors. It is designed to inform medical and public health professionals who are often tasked with promoting behaviors that improve health or prevent disease at the individual, organizational, community, regional, and/or national levels. It is also designed to be a book useful when the chief medical officer of a hospital or medical care organization turns to a colleague and says, "Our rate of handwashing or insert X is too low, and we need to increase that." The colleague can then offer a copy of this book, which provides a wide-ranging set of options on how to achieve such changes. It can also be applied to non-healthcare organizations and settings whenever someone wants to bring about cultural or behavioral change. Some of these options, such as network-identified opinion leaders, have considerable evidence, while others have none. The robust evidence base for NIs provides the basis for this book, with the goal of providing practical guidance to enable more widespread use of them. The book focuses on how to actively harness the influence of networks to engage people and organizations in behavior change efforts and improve the development and delivery of interventions Thomas W Valente PhD is Professor in the Department of Population and Public Health Sciences Keck School of Medicine University of Southern California Los Angeles CA USA Dissemination and Implementation Research in Health Ross C. Harris, 2013-12-23 This volume introduces the basic concepts of Exponential Random Graph Modeling ERGM gives examples of why it is used and shows the reader how to conduct basic ERGM analyses in their own research ERGM is a statistical approach to modeling social network structure that goes beyond the descriptive methods conventionally used in social network analysis Although it was developed to handle the inherent non independence of network data the results of ERGM are interpreted in similar ways to logistic regression making this a very useful method for examining social systems Recent advances in statistical software have helped make ERGM accessible to social scientists but a concise guide to using ERGM has been lacking This book fills that gap by using examples from public health and walking the reader through the process of ERGM model building using R statistical software and the statnet package An Introduction to Exponential Random Graph Modeling is a part of SAGE s Quantitative Applications in the Social Sciences QASS series which has helped countless students instructors and researchers learn cutting edge quantitative techniques Childhood Obesity Michael I. Network Analytics and Machine Learning Yi Sung, 2017 Data proliferation referring to the explosion in data generation by organizations leads us to spend considerable efforts on managing the data and retrieving the useful information from such huge amounts of data. This drives researchers to explore efficient approaches for analyzing the data and deriving insights to make better decisions. In this thesis we develop four different decision support models based on network analytics and machine learning methods to solve four different research problems in online social networks and healthcare systems. In most of the real world networks such as Facebook networks each node usually contains multiple attributes representing the nodes characteristics. It is difficult to identify the dominant attributes which have determining effects on community formation. In this thesis we disclose the association of node attributes to the community topology by defining dominance ratio and applying correlation metrics. The method is tested on Facebook data of 100 universities for uncovering how the offline lives infer online friendship construction. Healthcare systems are known to have huge amounts of data due to recording patient clinical history. In this thesis we develop three different recommendation and prediction models using network based methods and machine learning to support healthcare providers in making daily operational decisions. The first model SuperOrder is an automated recommendation system for outpatient clinics to predict what medical orders the providers would like to place for the upcoming appointments. The implementation of SuperOrder will increase order effectiveness and ease order documentations. The second model is to predict hospital length of stay LOS for patients who are admitted through emergency departments ED. The LOS model can help ED physicians make better decisions on hospitalization at the time of admission as well as reduce ED boarding time and solve ED overcrowding problem. The third model is to predict the remaining length of stay RLOS for general adult inpatients to determine which patients can be discharged from hospitals today or tomorrow. Unlike the LOS model which helps in admission decisions and demand forecasting the RLOS model supports in discharge planning and bed availability forecasting. All of these three healthcare prediction models are expected to be implemented in Geisinger Health System and integrated into their daily workflows to support providers daily decisions.
