This loss of interest has affected girls and the representation of women in STEM careers. The purpose of the study was to investigate the role that middle school science and math teachers have in shaping girls' attitudes and motivation and their perception of girls. This study gathered data through a mixed methods approach. Instruments used in this study included a Google survey consisting of Likert scale questions and individual interviews with participants. The study asked three research questions: 1. In suburban middle schools is there a gender difference among students in STEM activities or subjects? 2. Do middle school teachers treat boys differently from girls in reinforcing their self image of ability in math and science? 3. Are there gender differences in middle school students' perceptions of their abilities in math and science? The results of this study indicate that middle school girls do not have a negative perception towards STEM science or math as perceived by their teachers. Middle school girls are participating in science and math, often take the initiative when working in groups and pursue leadership roles in groups. This study also has proven that girls are called upon just as much as boys in these subject areas and girls do not shy away from challenging work as compared to boys. Girls are also more likely to finish their assignments in an organized and efficient way. Teachers are cognizant of the role that they play in helping their students reach their true potential in STEM subjects especially girls. Teachers in the study encouraged all their students to take risks in the classroom when completing challenging STEM related lessons and participation among boys and girls were mostly the same at this age level with only a
