Sustainable Development And Disaster Risk Reduction:

Sustainable Development and Disaster Risk Reduction Juha I. Uitto, Rajib Shaw, 2015-11-05 This book focuses on exploring the linkages between natural disasters and sustainable development at the global regional and national levels. Disasters and development are closely related yet the disciplinary silos prevail and there is little communication and cooperation between the disaster management environment and development communities. One catastrophic event such as an earthquake, tsunami, or cyclone can destroy infrastructure, people's lives and livelihoods, and set back development. Similarly, slow onset disasters often associated with global climate change pose threats to development, livelihoods, food security, and long-term sustainable development. This book is uniquely aimed at bridging the gaps between the environmental development and disaster management communities. It traces the evolution of concepts and practice and highlights the linkages between natural disasters and sustainable development in key sectors including food security, health, and water. The book includes case studies from the field highlighting the complex issues that challenge sustainable development and disaster risk management in practice. It draws policy conclusions for the global community based on state-of-the-art knowledge from research and practice. The primary target groups for the book are researchers, including graduate students, in the fields of environment and sustainable development, geography, disaster risk reduction, and climate change studies. The second target group comprises practitioners and policymakers working in national and international organizations, the private sector, and civil society.

Education for Sustainable Development and Disaster Risk Reduction Rajib Shaw, Yukihiko Oikawa, 2014-08-06 Education for Sustainable Development (ESD) and Disaster Risk Reduction (DRR) have overlapping areas of concern focusing on strengthening the link to local communities. In reality, there is significant synergy in ESD and disaster risk reduction (DRR). Both concepts urge looking at the communities, both focus on behavior changes, and both call for linking knowledge to action. The Decade of Education for Sustainable Development (DESD) ends in 2014 and the Hyogo Framework for Action (HFA) ends in 2015. Therefore, at this junction, it is important to review the progress made over the past 10 years and to suggest future synergy options. This book is the first attempt to review these two emerging fields and to provide input to the future direction of education. The book has 11 chapters drawing lessons mainly from Japan and discussing their implications for the world. The first four chapters provide an overview of the ESD-DRR linkage, ESD and its evolution, DRR, and Climate Change Education. These are followed by case studies from ESD practices in Japan in schools, universities, and communities. The primary target groups for this book are students and researchers in the fields of environment, disaster risk reduction, and climate change studies. The book provides them with a good idea of the current research trends in the field and furnishes basic knowledge about these vital topics. Another target group comprises practitioners and policy makers who will be able to apply the knowledge collected here to establishing policy and making decisions.

Development Karen Sudmeier-Rieux, Manuela Fernández, Ivanna M. Penna, Michel Jaboyedoff, J.C. Gaillard, 2016-08-29 The goal of this book is to explore disaster risk reduction DRR migration climate change adaptation CCA and sustainable development linkages from a number of different geographical social and natural science angles Well known scientists and practitioners present different perspectives regarding these inter linkages from around the world with theoretical discussions as well as field observations This publication contributes in particular to the discussion on the Sendai Framework for Disaster Risk Reduction SFDRR 2015-2030 and the debate about how to improve DRR including CCA policies and practices taking into account migration processes from a large perspective where both natural and social factors are crucial and mutually alloyed Some authors see the SFDRR as a positive step forward in terms of embracing a multitude of issues others doubting that the agreement will lead to much concrete action toward real action on the ground This book is a timely contribution for researchers students and policy makers in the fields of environment human geography migration disaster and climate change studies who seek a more comprehensive grasp of contemporary development issues

Natural Disasters, Globalization and Risk Reduction Giuseppe Manzillo,2011-02-14 Disaster Risk Management

DRM has recently become a significant concern for development cooperation among international and non governmental organizations NGOs involved in development programs Natural disasters have devastated an increasing number of regions especially those in the developing phase destroyed national and international investments and set back progress gained with development Developing countries are not able to reduce the impact of large scale catastrophes because they lack building codes land registration processes regulatory mechanisms and development itself Also they tend to prioritize other development projects and underestimate the risks presented by natural events Finally the quality of construction is very low in these countries and the effects of natural phenomena are therefore catastrophic The United Nations initiative for an International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction 1990 99 has placed this concern at the top of the international agenda

International and national actors UN agencies the World Bank NGOs and donor countries involved in the development of poor countries are now more concerned about prevention in their development programs DRM is considered an effective tool for protecting development projects yet it is infrequently considered by developing countries in their programs even in highly vulnerable countries As such developing countries are not able to effectively integrate a strategic approach to DRM into their national policy on their own causing the poorest communities to suffer the most as a result The improvement of living conditions and the promotion of a sustainable development are the core objectives of the organizations involved in the development of poor countries They intend to pursue those goals by including natural risk reduction and mitigation programs in their projects for development can be sustainable only by preventing or at least minimizing the effects of natural disasters In order to do so they have set up programs and mechanisms aimed at supporting developing countries local institutions to develop their DRM capacity and include it in their national policy Natural disasters are not a challenge to developing countries only they are also a challenge for development cooperation Strategies have been developed and implemented to reduce the vulnerability of populations in poor countries and to decrease disaster risk Developing countries should strengthen their capability to manage natural disasters by allocating more resources to Disaster Risk Reduction DRR programs and by cooperating with developed nations to reduce their higher vulnerability to natural hazards
