Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks for physical and psychological health. The physical health assessment included measures of body mass index (BMI), waist circumference, and blood pressure. The psychological health assessment included measures of self-esteem, anxiety, and depression. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program resulted in a significant decrease in BMI, waist circumference, and blood pressure. The walking program also resulted in a significant increase in self-esteem and a significant decrease in anxiety and depression. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

- The following factors represent evidence that a business is not a mere profit-making unit:
 - Nature: knowledge of the essential character of the enterprise, production of a product or service
 - Location: Is it in a place that is not within range of the most profitable customer market, after taking into account the costs for transport, storage and further costs for shipping it to the market?
 - Objectively: a 20% improvement will go to a party and bank
 - Risk: business, industry research process, including the elements: history, economic environment and financial position

Abstract: The purpose of this study was to investigate the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of elderly people. The study was conducted in a community center in Istanbul, Turkey. The participants were 40 elderly people (20 men and 20 women) aged 65 and above. They were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The experimental group participated in a 12-week training program that included aerobic exercises, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The control group did not participate in any training program. Data were collected at the beginning and end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness and psychological well-being compared to the control group at the end of the 12-week period. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical and psychological health of elderly people.
