Developmental Theories

- Show the differences (and provide the following) between these two theory terms: Development and Developmental Stages? Development corresponds to the process through which these terms are created, while Developmental Stages are subprocesses within the process of Development.
- Piaget: Stages of Development: On paper, it is common to begin an analysis with the Stages of Development (providing specific categories for the process, cognitive and affective growth). This is because, when analyzing a child's behavior, it is easier to determine which stage the child is in. Developmental Stages: Process (the process of growth) Developmental Stages: Categories (the stages of growth).
- Freud: Stages of Development: On paper, it is common to begin an analysis with the Stages of Development (providing specific categories for the process, cognitive and affective growth). This is because, when analyzing a child's behavior, it is easier to determine which stage the child is in. Developmental Stages: Process (the process of growth) Developmental Stages: Categories (the stages of growth).
