

 The McGraw-Hill Companies

Colgate's Gerson was born in Philadelphia in a poor immigrant family. He became an entrepreneur, producing such products as chewing gum and the Colgate toothbrush. He built a fortune in the rubber industry, but then lost it when his company's rubber plantations in Central America were destroyed by a drought and a volcanic eruption. He spent his last years in the United States, where he was known for his philanthropy. He died in 1906, leaving a fortune of $10 million.

The development of the various traditions and practices within African religions is closely connected to the historical changes which shaped Africa in the past centuries. African religions have been subjected to a variety of influences, and have been transformed as a result of the processes of acculturation and syncretism, which have created African religions in the past. Today, the practice of African religions is undergoing new developments, and new religious movements are emerging in Africa. This is a very interesting topic, and I will discuss it in more detail in the next section.
