

The complaints reached the ears of the grim Saladin, who was facing his own problems. In 1187, four years after Suhrawardī's arrival in Aleppo, Saladin had destroyed the Kingdom of Jerusalem at the Battle of the Horns of Hattin. The disaster, with the attendant loss of Jerusalem, roused Christendom. The counterattack came four years later, in 1191, in the form of the Third Crusade, led by the two kings Richard the Lion-hearted of England and Philip Augustus of France. That same year Saladin ordered Suhrawardī put to death. The events are probably related. Though the sources are confused, it seems that Saladin became alarmed at the influence Suhrawardī had acquired over his son—an alarm that was fanned by the more orthodox clergy of Aleppo. Suhrawardī, a Platonist, evidently sought to train the young prince to be a philosopher-king—and he was accused of claiming to be a prophet himself. Even before he came to Aleppo, he had had dealings with several rulers in Anatolia; these contacts may have been attempts to carry out the implicit political program of his Illuminationist philosophy. Saladin had met philosopher-kings before—the Fatimid caliphs in Egypt and the Old Man of the Mountain with his murderous followers—and he did not like them. He could not take the chance that Aleppo, with its location strategic for both Saladin and the Crusaders, might revolt or even make common cause with the Crusaders. Saladin sent repeated orders that the troublesome philosopher be executed. Eventually, the reluctant prince obeyed, some said by leaving Suhrawardī to die of hunger.<sup>7</sup>

The Illuminationist Philosophy

The nature of the "Illuminationist philosophy" has long been a matter of controversy. As early as the thirteenth century, Shams al-Dīn Shahrāzūrī (d. after 1288) could write, "The philosophy of illumination (ḥikmat al-ishrāq) is the philosophy based upon illumination (ishrāq), which is unveiling (kashf), or the philosophy of the easterners, which is to say, the Persians." He adds, helpfully,

It amounts to the same thing since their philosophy is based on unveiling and intuition (al-kashf wa al-dhawq) and so is related to the illumination that is the manifestation of the intelligible lights, of their first principles, and their emanation of illuminations upon the perfected souls when they are abstracted from bodily matter. The Persians relied in their philosophy upon intuition and unveiling. The ancient philosophers of Greece did the same, with the exception of Aristotle and his school, who relied only upon reasoning and syllogism.<sup>8</sup>
