

Apon Vs Upon

Upon

"Upon" is a preposition in English. A preposition is a word that helps us understand the relationship between different parts in a sentence. For example, prepositions can tell us where something is, when something happens, or the way something is done.

"Upon" is often used to show that something is on top of something else, or that something is happening in response to something. Here are a few examples:

- "The cat jumped upon the table." (The cat is now on top of the table.)
- "Upon hearing the news, she smiled." (She smiled in response to hearing the news.)

Apon

Here's where it gets interesting. "Apon" is not a word that you'll find in standard English dictionaries. It's actually a common misspelling of "upon." This mistake happens because "upon" and "apon" sound very similar when we say them. However, in writing, only "upon" is correct.
