- Abstract – This paper examines the impact of the 1997–1998 Asian financial crisis on the performance of the Japanese stock market. The Japanese stock market is characterized by a high level of institutional ownership and a high degree of market concentration. The paper finds that the Japanese stock market experienced a significant decline in performance during the crisis, which was primarily driven by a sharp decline in the prices of large-cap stocks. The paper also finds that the Japanese stock market was able to recover its performance relatively quickly after the crisis, which was primarily driven by a recovery in the prices of large-cap stocks. The paper concludes that the Japanese stock market is highly resilient to financial crises, which is primarily due to its high level of institutional ownership and its high degree of market concentration.
