- The Earth is not entirely the same all the way throughout the inside of the planet. Instead, Earth is made up of different layers with different characteristics (and composition). This means they are made of different materials and behave differently from one another.
- We do not know for sure what any of the layers inside of Earth are, as the outside we have not been able to look inside-but scientists studied these differences through the 1500s in order to understand what the inside of the Earth is like.
- There are two different types of crust - oceanic and continental.
 - Oceanic crust is found under the oceans. It is thinner and more dense than continental crust. This means that it breaks into plates with a continental plate, it will sink in to the ocean floor, resulting in an island.
 - Continental crust is found on land. It is thicker and less dense than oceanic crust. This means that it is broken into plates with a continental plate, it will "float" on the plates and go up high off it.
- Underneath the crust is the lithosphere (the layer of the Earth's interior, the crust). This area is solid but behaves like a liquid due to being too hot and under pressure. This is true of some parts of the crust:
 - The upper crust (lithosphere) is the upper crust.
- The lithosphere and crust stick together - this is called the lithosphere. This is made of tectonic plates, we are referring to the lithosphere.
- Plate movement is caused by convection currents in the lower crust.
