Chapter 1: An Introduction to the Human Body

1. Define the terms anatomy and physiology.

   Anatomy: The science of body structures and the relationships among them.

   Physiology: The science of body functions — how the body parts work

   Dissection:

2. Define the following levels of structural organization: chemical, cellular, tissue, organ, system and organism.

   Chemical: The very basic level. Includes atoms, the smallest units of matter that participate in chemical reactions, and molecules (two or more atoms joined together).

   Cellular: Molecules combine to form cells, the basic structural and functional units of an organism that are composed of chemicals. Examples include: muscle cell, nerve cell, epithelial cell

   Tissue: groups of cells and materials surround them that work together to perform a particular function. Four basic types of tissue:

   - Epithelial Tissue: covers body surfaces, lines hollow organs and cavities, and forms glands.
   - Connective Tissue: connects, supports, and protects body organs while distributing blood vessels to other tissues.
   - Muscular Tissues: Contracts to make body parts move and generates heat.
   - Nervous Tissue: carries information from one part of the body to another through nerve impulses

   Organ: Different types of tissues are joined together. Organs are the structures that are composed of two or more different types of tissues; they have specific functions and usually have recognizable shapes.

   System: Consists of related organs with a common function. Sometimes an organ is part of more than one system (e.g. pancreas is part of both the digestive system and the endocrine system)
